Biography

Corissa is an Associate in the firm's Litigation Practice Group, where she represents clients in a broad range of civil litigation and insurance defense matters. Her practice encompasses complex tort and liability claims, including personal injury, negligence, wrongful death, workplace discrimination, municipal law, and New Jersey Law Against Discrimination (NJLAD) matters.

Corissa brings a diverse legal background to her practice. Prior to entering private practice, she served as a judicial law clerk to the Honorable Wayne J. Forrest in the Family Division of the Superior Court of New Jersey. In that role, she worked extensively on matters involving child abuse and neglect as well as domestic violence, gaining valuable courtroom experience and insight into sensitive and complex legal issues.

Since entering private practice, Corissa has developed substantial experience handling civil litigation matters from inception through resolution. She has represented clients in insurance defense, tort litigation, employment-related disputes, and municipal law matters. Her experience includes all phases of litigation, including pleadings, discovery, motion practice, depositions, court appearances, and trial preparation.

Corissa has handled all aspects of litigation leading up to trial and has substantial courtroom experience. Her broad background in both family and civil litigation provides her with a comprehensive perspective when evaluating and defending complex claims.

Corissa earned her Juris Doctor from Seton Hall University School of Law, where she participated in the Criminal Law Clinic and provided legal services to clients under faculty supervision.
